

Project Guidelines

Students will also be on the look-out for their “golden passage”—some section of text that really speaks to you. A golden passage is one that contains worlds of meaning.

Students will pinpoint a golden passage for the first half of the course and for the second. For each passage, you will generate a creative production that animates your passage in some way. The ultimate objective here is to see the meaning behind a particular selection—something that transcends the cultural gap between us and our materials.

The only firm requirement in your production is that it must be something that is viewable by the rest of us on our computers. It may be a video of an oration you deliver in the park, a completely digital concoction, etc. The course contains a list of potential resources that you might use to fashion your production. You have no requirement to use any of them. They are simply there as potential options.
