Scheming to Compute Knot Polynomials

by Tom Shelly, Edmonds Community College

If we look closely near a point on a complex plane curve, it turns out that we find a knot or a link. The more complicated the curve is at that point, the more complicated the knot or link is. We will discuss a rather surprising connection between the algebraic geometry of the curve and the HOMFLY invariant of the knot that we find.

For additional info contact McLean Slaughter: sloughtj@seattleu.edu or Katya Yurasovskaya yurasov@seattleu.edu