RESOURCES For Students, Faculty, and Staff

Seattle University students, faculty, and staff who experience discrimination, harassment, sexual misconduct, or related retaliation, are encouraged to take care of their physical and emotional well-being – and to let others help.

Those who wish to receive counseling, medical, or other support services, are encouraged to seek assistance from the on-campus and off-campus resources listed below, regardless of whether a formal complaint is pursued.

- For additional information and resources specific to sexual misconduct, please see SU’s Sexual Misconduct Information and Resources page [seattleu.edu/deanofstudents/sexual-misconduct].
- Also, please note that the on-campus resources and services listed below are also available to witnesses, those accused, persons providing support, and all individuals otherwise affected.

For assistance with accessing any of these on- or off-campus resources, students, faculty, and staff are welcomed to contact the Office of Institutional Equity (OIE) [seattleu.edu/equity].
