Any undergraduate student who does not meet the standards listed above for their respective major and school or college will receive one of the following:

Academic Warning

In the first term that a student does not meet the Academic Standards for their school/college and/or major, that student will receive an Academic Warning from their school/college. An Academic Warning will communicate concern about a student's academic performance and serve as a formal reminder of available support and the Academic Standards of the student's school/college and/or major.

Academic Probation

In subsequent terms (consecutive or non-consecutive), a student who does not meet the Academic Standards may be placed on Academic Probation or again on Academic Warning by their school/college. In order to recover their academic standing, students must meet the academic conditions listed as part of their initial placement on Academic Warning.

Academic Suspension

A student who has been placed on Academic Probation and, in a subsequent term (consecutive or non- consecutive), does not meet the Academic Standards may be placed on Academic Suspension by their school/college. A student placed on Academic Suspension will be dropped from next term's classes following an unsuccessful appeal for Academic Reinstatement.

In order to recover their academic standing and re-enroll in courses at SU, students must follow the Academic Reinstatement procedure, outlined in the formal notification from the school/college.

Academic Reinstatement

A student may appeal their Academic Suspension and apply for Academic Reinstatement, permitting them to reenroll in their original program or to seek to continue in a different academic program and/or school/college at Seattle University. There are multiple ways a student may be reinstated—all outlined in the formal notification a student will receive from their school/college upon being placed on academic suspension. A student who has been reinstated will recover their academic standing when they meet the minimum academic standards for their school/college and/or major.
